Mr. James R. Doty
Chairman
Public Company Accounting Oversight Board
1666 K Street, NW
Washington, DC 20006-2803

Dear Mr. Doty:

The Committee on Oversight and Government Reform (Committee) is conducting oversight of the use of economic analysis in financial services regulation. The Committee has been concerned with the role and use of cost-benefit analysis in rulemaking at the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). Significant and inexcusable deficiencies in this analysis have drawn strong criticism from the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit,¹ this Committee,² the Administration,³ stakeholders,⁴ and scholars.⁵

On March 16, 2012, the SEC's Office of the General Counsel and the Division of Risk, Strategy, and Financial Innovation circulated a memorandum entitled Current Guidance on Economic Analysis in SEC Rulemakings (Current Guidance).⁶ The Current Guidance contains a set of clear procedural directives to all SEC rulewriting staff mandating the application of rigorous economic analysis. In an effort to inform both SEC staff and the public of the specific and mandatory nature of the Current Guidance, the Commission has posted the document on its website.⁷

On April 17, 2012, SEC Chairman Mary Schapiro testified before the Subcommittee on TARP, Financial Services and Bailouts of Public and Private Programs.⁸ In both her testimony and in a letter to the Committee, Chairman Schapiro expressed her unequivocal commitment to the policies and principles of the Current Guidance.⁹ Chairman Schapiro explicitly stated that the Current Guidance is binding upon all SEC rulewriting staff, and embodies the best practices for agency rulemaking.¹⁰

While the Committee is hopeful that the implementation of the policies and principles of the Current Guidance will improve the economic analysis underlying Commission rules, a major outstanding concern is the role of economic analysis in rulemakings by private-sector regulatory organizations subject to SEC oversight, including the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board (PCAOB). At another Subcommittee hearing on June 28, 2012, Chairman Schapiro directly addressed the applicability of the Current Guidance to rulemaking by such organizations.¹¹ While contending that the majority of such rules are “routine and operational” in nature, Chairman Schapiro nonetheless recognized that “major” rules should contain the rigorous economic analysis prescribed by the Current Guidance. Chairman Schapiro acknowledged deficiencies in current rulemaking procedure by such organizations, stating that there are some categories of rules “where more analysis ought to be done.”¹² She added that “on rules that have a more major, profound impact, we should be seeking more economic analysis.”¹³

Chairman Schapiro’s endorsement of the application of rigorous economic analysis to major rulemaking by private-sector regulatory organizations accords with the President’s conception of regulatory best practices. Executive Order 13563, signed by President Obama on January 18, 2011, makes clear that “[o]ur regulatory system . . . must identify and use the best, most innovative and least burdensome tools for achieving regulatory ends. It must take into account benefits and costs, both quantitative and qualitative.”¹⁴ The PCAOB, as a statutorily-recognized regulatory organization, is an integral and influential part of our national regulatory system. Accordingly, it should comply with these constructive regulatory standards.

Notwithstanding the unanimous agreement of the President of the United States, the Chairman of Securities and Exchange Commission, this Committee, and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit as to the desirability of rigorous cost-benefit analysis, it appears some rulemaking has relied on substandard economic analysis. On May 4, 2012, the Commission considered a proposed rule change by the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board (MSRB) concerning the application of MSRB Rule G-17 to underwriters of municipal securities. In a reasoned and persuasive dissent, SEC Commissioners Gallagher and Paredes observed:

Any rulemaking — whether by a self-regulatory organization, such as the MSRB, or by the Commission itself — should be the product of a careful and balanced assessment of the potential consequences that could arise. Such an assessment should entail a thorough analysis of both the intended benefits and the possible costs of a proposed rulemaking in order to ensure that any regulatory decision to proceed with the initiative reflects a well-reasoned conclusion that the benefits will come at an acceptable cost. This requires identifying the scope and nature of the problem to be addressed, determining the likelihood that the proposed rulemaking will mitigate or remedy the problem, evaluating how the rule change could impact affected parties for better and for worse, and justifying the recommended course of action as compared to the primary alternatives.

The decision-making process that led to the Commission's approval of the MSRB's proposed rule change falls far short of meeting this benchmark.¹⁵

While a majority of the Commission ultimately approved MSRB Rule G-17, there should be little disagreement with Commissioners Gallagher and Paredes' fundamental premise: any and every rulemaking body should methodically analyze a proposed policy so as to ensure that it is likely to promote the public interest. Compliance with the policies and principles of the Current Guidance is essential to this proposition.

Compliance with the policies and principals of the Current Guidance is rendered all the more necessary by virtue of PCAOB's quasi-governmental status. While PCAOB is a private, corporate entity, its rulemaking authority exists by operation of Title I of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act.¹⁶ The exercise of this extraordinary grant of power makes it all the more critical that PCAOB conform to a government-wide consensus as to best practices for regulatory analysis.

The Committee recognizes the valuable and important role private regulatory organizations can play in the marketplace. Such regulation can be an effective and efficient means of serving the public interest. However, to be effective, these regulations must be informed by rigorous economic analysis. To enable the Committee to better understand PCAOB's policy and practice with regard to economic analyses, we request that you provide responses to the following requests for information, producing documents as requested and as necessary to sufficiently support your answers. Please answer each question individually, specifying the question number to which you are responding.

1. Please provide all internal policies, procedures, or guidelines governing the use of economic analysis in PCAOB rulemaking.
2. Do you believe the policies and principles of the Current Guidance can assist PCAOB in meeting its rulewriting responsibilities?
3. Do you agree that rigorous economic analysis is a necessary step in determining whether a given policy serves the public interest?

4. Do you agree that the economic analysis supporting PCAOB's rulemaking should be subject to advance public comment?
5. Please provide all guidance PCAOB has requested from the SEC on the applicability or implementation of the policies and principles of the Current Guidance to PCAOB rulemaking.
6. Please provide all records of all internal discussions as to the applicability or implementation of the policies and principles of the Current Guidance.
7. Do you agree with Chairman Schapiro's testimony that for a certain category of rules by private regulatory organizations, "more analysis ought to be done?"¹⁷
8. Section 1 of Executive Order 13563, signed by President Obama on January 18, 2011, states: "Our regulatory system . . . must identify and use the best, most innovative and least burdensome tools for achieving regulatory ends. It must take into account benefits and costs, both quantitative and qualitative."¹⁸ Do you agree that PCAOB, as a statutorily-created regulatory organization, is an integral and influential component of our national regulatory system?
9. Please provide records of any internal or external discussion of the applicability of Executive Order 13563 or 13579.
10. Please state whether regulated companies are involved in PCAOB rulemaking.
 - a. Please specifically identify the opportunity for, and degree of, regulated company consultation in the rulemaking process.
 - b. Please specifically identify the opportunity for, and degree of, regulated company review of formulated rules.
11. PCAOB is a private, non-profit corporate entity that nonetheless shares in the government's monopoly on legal compulsory power. Please state whether the statutory grant of rulemaking authority entails that PCAOB follow clear, methodical, and explicitly enunciated procedures to ensure that each proposed rule serves the public interest.

The Committee on Oversight and Government Reform is the principal oversight committee of the House of Representatives and may at "any time" investigate "any matter" as set forth in House Rule X.
